Watch Videos, Read Comments or Add Your.Q: How does the Android GPSTracker work? I have created a simple Android application which calculates the Longitude and the Latitude of a device and display it on the device screen. The application was working fine on the emulator but when I put it in my android device, the device displays a string like this: 10.9748639 - 72.8581127 I am not sure about how this time-stamp is calculated and what happens if the device is outside of my country. When I dialed that number (10.9748639 - 72.8581127) on my cell phone using the Google Map application from my phone and the address of my location as a destination, I got the same time-stamp. That means that the GPSTracker must be taking that number from the Google Maps Application. But I don't know how that happens. How does the GPSTracker work? Here is my source code :
